

Horace Book I, Ode II

Tū nē quaesierīs, scīre nefās, quem mihi, quem tibi finem dī dederint, Leuconoē, nec Babylōniōs temptāris numerōs. Ut melius, quidquid erit, patī, seu plūrēs hiemēs seu tribuit Iuppiter ultimam, quae nunc oppositīs dēbilitat pūmicibus mare Tyrrhēnum. Sapiās, vīna liquēs, et spatiō brevī spem longam resecēs. Dum loquimur, fūgerit invida aetās: carpe diem, quam minimum crēdula posterō.

You may not ask, to know is forbidden, what end, to me, to you, the gods have given, Colinda, nor be tempted by the Babylonian numbers. So much better to endure whatever will be, whether more winters, or the last one Jupiter has parceled out, which now cripples the Tyrrhenian Sea against the rocks.
May you savor, decant the wine, and in a short space cut back long hope. While we speak, life's grudging time has fled. Reap the day, trusting in the next so very little.
